Achieving Impact With Networks

Is Today About Networking?

Yes; the kind that’s done in pursuit of mission impact through engaging, mobilizing, and supporting trusted, values-aligned peers.
Is This the Same as Collective Impact?
No. Complementary principles, key differences in focus.

CI: structures and systems. Networks: values and culture.

CI: funder-driven impacts. Networks: organic, bottom-up approaches and mutually beneficial solutions.
Why Networks?

Because three observations from the field point directly to their unique effectiveness.
Field Observation #1: Growth is Hard.

For nonprofits and NGOs, achieving the scale and sustainability needed to meet their mission is extraordinarily challenging.
Field Observation #2:
Size Doesn’t Guarantee Impact.

Even large global NGOs are dwarfed by the scale of the problems they seek to address and struggle to ensure their impact is greater than the sum of their individual parts.
Field Observation #3: How We Define Success Matters.

Our tendency to assess organizational performance denies the more important assessment of mission impact.
Networks Work When…

the goal is to mobilize various organizations and resources that together can deliver more impact not when the goal is to become a leading organization first, engaging in collaboration at the margins.

What Can Any Collaboration Learn from High-Impact Networks?

A different leadership mindset and different metrics.

The network is seen as the primary vehicle for change, not the organization.
Network Entrepreneurship = A Mindset Shift

Rooted in four counterintuitive principles:

1. Mission, Not Organization.
4. Trust, Not Control.
Principle #1:
Mission, Not Organization.

Leaders adopt strategies and tactics to achieve a mission, not necessarily to stimulate organizational growth.
Principle #2: Node, Not Hub.

Network partners see their organizations as part of a larger web of activity targeting a cause, not as a hub of action.
Static Role as Hub
Dynamic Role as Node
Principle #3: Humility, Not Brand.

Organizations work alongside their peers as equals and willingly take a back seat when their partners are in a better position to lead.
Principle #4: Trust, Not Control.

Trust and shared values are far more important (and robust) than formal control mechanisms such as contracts or accountability systems.
Networks: Forces Seen and Unseen

The unique power of a network comes from massive but largely invisible forces... like these.
What’s Below the Surface?
A Strong Network Arises from a “Risky Mindset”

Don’t underestimate the power...
...of risk.
The Perils of Adaptive Change and Life on the Balcony consider the following excerpts from Leadership on the Line: Staying Alive through the Dangers of Leading

Perils

“Leadership would be a safe undertaking if your organizations and communities only faced problems for which they already knew the solutions. Every day people have problems for which they do, in fact, have the necessary know-how and procedures. We call these technical problems.”
“But there is a whole host of problems that are not amenable to the authoritative expertise or standard operating procedures. They cannot be solved by someone who provides answers from on high. We call these adaptive challenges because they require experiments, new discoveries, and adjustments from numerous places in the organization or community.”
Getting on the Balcony

“Most people instinctively follow a dominant trend in an organization or community, without critical evaluation of its merits. The herd instinct is strong. And a stampede not only tramples those who don’t keep pace, it also makes it hard to see another direction—until the dust settles.”
What Does a “Network Mindset” Look Like?

Some observable traits:
Trait #1: Eyes on the Prize
Visionary, but resists being sidetracked.
Trait #2: Sees the Big Picture

Integrative thinker, listener, and communicator.
Trait #3: Inclusive

Uses the art of honestly reflecting the various perspectives to draw people into deeper exploration.
Trait #4: Entrepreneurial

Finds space to use network leadership, sometimes under the radar.
Trait #5: Submission to Mission

The work is never about making their own role more important.
Trait #6: Willing to Be Vulnerable

Makes it safe for partners to go below the surface to discover mutual values, beliefs, and assumptions.
Trait #7: Believes in “Little L” Leadership

You don’t have to be in charge to lead. Neither does anyone else.
Trait #8: Continuously Invests in Relationships

Listens vs. talks.
Inquires vs. asserts.
Believes relationships have inherent value beyond the immediate endgame.
Trait #9: Rewards Getting it Right, Not Being Right

Acknowledges that vulnerability, humility, release of control, and trust = sacrifice and risk.
Four Counterintuitive Principles of Network Leadership:

1. Mission, Not Organization.
4. Trust, Not Control.
“If you do what you’ve always done, you’ll get what you’ve always gotten.”
